About the Presenters

Selina Mudavanhu works for the African Gender Institute (University of Cape Town). Prior to joining the AGI, Selina worked as a journalist in Zimbabwe. She then moved to the Friedrich Ebert Stiftung where she was responsible for Media and Gender Projects. She later worked for the Cape Town based Southern African Media and Gender Institute as the Coordinator of the Women's Media Watch Unit. Selina is currently doing her PhD in Media Studies with the Centre for Film and Media Studies at the University of Cape Town. Selina enjoys telling stories using digital tools.

Jennifer Radloff recently re-joined the AGI and works part-time as the web content and communications manager. Jennifer also works for the Association for Progressive Communications (APC). Her work over the past 15 years had involved working with women's rights activists in the creative and strategic use of ICTs for social change and women's empowerment at local, regional and global level. Her interests include feminist practices and politics of technology and using methodologies such as digital storytelling to facilitate people creating their own stories in their own voices and engaging with technologies in a meaningful way.
